

How To Spend It Food & Drink

+ Add to myFT

The 50 greatest food stores in the world

Where to find the best produce on the planet, from classic New York delis and Indian spice emporiums to German sausage shops

Tim Auld, Leah Bhabha, Emiko Davies, Christina Ohly Evans, Fiona Golfar, Ajesh Patalay, Charlene Prempeh, Maria Shollenbarger, Rima Suqi MAY 19 2021

Culina, Singapore

Culina: "nirvana for jet-setting expat gastronomes"

Owned by hospitality maven Christina Ong (she of COMO Hotels renown), Culina is where you come when you absolutely must have violet-fig confiture from Alain Milliat in Lyon, or free-range eggs from New Zealand, or anchovies and octopus from a family-owned purveyor on the Bay of Biscay in northern Spain, or tender organic Angus from Australia's Margaret River. Not so much about the local, then, but utter nirvana for jet-setting expat gastronomes. There's a sleek, absurdly comprehensive wine cellar – arguably the city's strongest on fine French producers – and an even sleeker bistro. MS culina.com.sg

Full Article Here:

<https://www.ft.com/content/684252ce-7b37-4a2a-a0f7-15fe19e071d9>